the coming wave is the fourth volume of the yacht club series and is an entirely independent story though the incidents are located on penobscot bay and relate largely to boats and yachting the characters have not before been presented but some of them will again be introduced in the subsequent volumes of the series there is some breezy sailing in the story and penobscot bay would not be properly described without the dense fog upon which the turn of events depends in one of the chapters nor is such a hurricane as that with which the story begins an unknown occurrence in these waters whatever interest the volume may possess however does not wholly depend upon the experience in fog and gale of the hero and his friends for the plot is as much of the land as of the sea leopold bennington and stumpy are the chief characters they are both working boys who earn their own living and do nothing more surprising than other young men have done before them they are fastidiously honest and strictly upright though they make mistakes like other human beings they try to do their whole duty sometimes under very difficult circumstances and if other boys may not do exactly as they did in certain cases they may imitate leopold and stumpy in having pg 7 a high aim and in striving to reach it if young people only mean well they can hardly fail to lead good and true lives in spite of their errors of judgment or even their occasional failures to do right towerhouse boston
